their best interests, and in some cases help him in his work.

"One peculiarity of his unique character was, that he was seldom if ever in favor of anything, but was usually 'agin' something. He was noted for going barefooted, wearing 'one gallus,' drinking whisky, 'beating the brush,' promising 'To keep us out of war,' riding around the state capital in automobiles with pretty women, happily serving on boards, going on junketing expeditions, serving as clerk in the legislature, running for office, issuing bulletins, telling the farmers of the immense fortunes to be made raising hogs, 'if you'll just go at it right.' He was in favor of increasing salaries, collecting 'commissions,' 'mileage,' and other things along that line. He was a great lover of office holding. He never was satisfied with anything he had, but always wanted something better.

Was Strictly "Agin" It

"He was 'agin' a tariff for protection, 'agin' sound money, 'agin' anything that restricted 'personal liberty,' 'agin' auditing books, 'agin' constructive legislation, 'agin' reducing the force of useless clerks to the legislature, 'agin' the removal of boards and commissions with nothing to do. He was 'agin' the public schools to such an extent as to make Missouri fall behind 34 progressive states of the Union; he was 'agin' business on a large scale. He was 'agin' war and promised to 'keep us out of war.' He was 'agin' practically everything except to hold office.

"His death is much regretted by some of his cohorts, but it is developing at the inquest that he came to his death by the administration of poison by his long time friends and backers, aided and abetted by his long time opponents.

"He has been skinned, his body cremated, and his hide hung over a pole to dry.

"His voice is stilled; his chair is vacant; no more will you see him parade, headed by the flaming torch and the brass band. No more will you see him, wearing a Bee Gum Hat, a silk shirt, riding around the state capital in the 76-horse automobile with the handsome ladies.

"His worshippers are long faced, down in the mouth, finding fault with those they are holding responsible for his 'untimely calling away.'

"His funeral services took place at Jefferson City, Missouri, on the 5th of January, A. D. 1921, and he was skinned, cremated and his hide hung over a pole to dry at Washington, D. C., on the 4th day of March, A. D. 1921."

Second Canto—Next Spasm

And then—My God! how can it be told in this land of supposed intelligence and culture? How is it possible to breathe into already shrinking horrified ears the awful conclusion of this tale of woe and abasement and degradation?—how can a Christian community stand this fearful concluding truth?—but it must like murder—out—and here it is—shocking in all its nakedness—Mr. A—beg pardon—Mr. Pigg has actually coached his final castigation IN VERBERE—and horror of horrors!—has SET IT TO MUSIC.

"My God! My God! why hast thou forsaken me!"

And here in its nakedness—its virile intensity—its rhythmic splendor—its tuncful majesty—is the grand finale, minus only the music "notes" of which sort of type this Democratic organ is just now decidedly short—so gentle and pitying reader absorb easily—and drop the briny tear where it will pity the now defunct Democratic party ruthlessly slaughtered by—a—beg pardon—Mr. Pigg—just when it had grown to an age where it might have—"might have" is used advisedly—been of some trifling assistance to the four or five millions of people who reside in this state—but 'twas ever thus—the good die young, slain by—a—beg pardon—Mr. Pigg—with melody just like this concluding refrain which he so merrily warbles:

Canto Third—Final Crash

"No more you'll see his old moustache, No more the brush you'll see him beat;

His hide hangs o'er a pole to dry, No more you'll see him lie and cheat.

"His friends don't think that he is dead,

They'll 'referend' him back to life;

His old 'one gallus' has been lost, He's doped with this old world of strife.

"No more 'he'll keep us out of war,' No more he'll make a promise grand;

His hide hangs o'er a pole to dry, No more he'll rule this glorious land.

"The useless clerks are all torn up, The ancient grafters are all mad;

They see the hides stretched o'er a pole Their forlorn faces look so sad,

"Democracy is dead, and gone, His drying hide is all that's left;

His chums for fifty years so gay, Are lonesome weeping and bereft.

"I heard a weeping dog last night, Loud to the moon he seem'd to pray;

His master has been skind'd alive, At last they both have seen their day.

"The Jack kept in north end of town, Is sadly weeping day and night;

Because Democracy is dead, His weeping truly is a fright.

"The cats are sad and weeping too, I heard them while I lay in bed;

They've also caught the sad refrain, I heard them weeping in the shed."

And for the last time—"My God! My God! My God! why hast thou forsaken me?"

The cars of Mandaville Deputy and M. M. Millitt collided at Tenth and Francis Sunday, and were badly smashed.

Our Conductors and Motormen

come in for some of the nagging now so popular in St. Joseph, yet we know that as a general rule they are courteous, and the courtesy genuine.

Our patrons, with few exceptions, feel kindly toward our conductors and know that public safety depends much upon co-operation.

Sometimes we receive letters from patrons who are especially pleased by little acts of human kindness from our men on duty, and these letter writers naturally encourage all of us to perform better service for all of our patrons and to be more tolerant with the occasional bilious one.

Street Railway Conductors and Motormen of whom we receive the greatest number of complimentary letters will hereafter be recognized for their popularity each month: so if some act on their part pleases you enough to make you want to write us about it, obey the impulse, drop us a note.

June 1st we will present the conductor or motorman mentioned by name or number in the most letters, $50.00 cash; to the conductor or motorman ranking next to him, $25.00 cash.

The patron sending us the account of the most remarkable act of conductor or motorman's cleverness will also receive recognition in the form of some pleasing, worth-while token.

Where deserved, won't you do this for your benefit and ours?
